

1. Consider a population such that the 2% of the individuals suffer disease. A diagnostic test is available for such an illness. The test is positive for the 97% of ill individuals and for the 6% of healthy individuals.

We apply the test to a person and the result is positive. Calculate the probability that this person is actually ill with 4 significant digits.